Dear Chairman Genachowski:

As we start this New Year, I feel we must look forward to anticipate and address the challenges that face us. The use of technology in business and personal lives is growing at a rapid pace, and I fear that our current infrastructure will not be able to keep up with this pace. As I understand it, mobile and wireless spectrum is becoming too cumbersome for our existing network infrastructure to handle. More and more people now use wireless and mobile devices, and as such, we need to maintain a solid network that will reliably handle this way of doing business and communication.

I have been made aware of LightSquared's initiative to build and develop a mobile broadband network and I encourage you to support them in their efforts. Not only will LightSquared's new network alleviate growing spectrum congestion, but it will also boost other businesses by allowing them to remain competitive in their service offerings. VoX Communications has stated that LightSquared's network will allow them to provide high-quality, low-cost bundled service to consumers that includes both data and voice options to a larger market of customers. Given our current economic situation, we cannot afford to ignore the benefits this network will bring to other businesses.

I urge you to consider LightSquared's proposal to ensure that businesses like VoX Communication and individuals who use mobile and wireless broadband have access to reliable, solid networks that will carry us into the future. I appreciate your efforts and consideration in this matter.

Sincerely,

Hayes Framme
